

Ratings (12/05)

The college football world got what it wanted. Alabama and Texas, two great traditions, the Heisman Trophy winner, and most of all no controversy. Unless, I guess, you saw the Texas-Nebraska game and wonder whether an ill-advised pass landing a half-second before disaster doesn't veto a national championship. As you'll notice below, my ratings completely agree with the Alabama vs. Texas matchup.

There was some discussion of bad clock management after the game. LSU's problems against Ole Miss this year came up, where they were not granted an extra play and lost the game. An old classic was Ken Stabler throwing the ball out of bounds to stop the clock, and then finding out that's not a good idea on fourth down. "You can never tell about left-handed quarterbacks and left-handed crapshooters," said the Bear. Stabler was both.

This will be the fifth bowl game between Alabama and Texas. The Horns are 4-0-1. One game that will be mentioned often is the 1964 Orange Bowl featuring another Alabama quarterback of some fame, Joe Namath.

Another famous Texas game had its 40th anniversary recently. The Texas-Arkansas game of 1969 is the subject of a very good book with a perfect title: Hogs, Horns and Nixon Coming.

The main "BCS screwed it up" topic this year seems to be having TCU and Boise in the same bowl. Neither team gets a chance for a signature win, the BCS-busters are marginalized, etc. My thought is that this is what happens when you let the bowls choose. At least the system forced them to take good teams. Otherwise, Brian Kelly might be in the Sugar Bowl, as coach of Notre Dame.

Below are all 34 of the bowl games, what the ratings say about them, my evaluation of the best wins and worst losses for each team, and anything else I can think of to say.

Enjoy the games, and have a great bowl season!
